In May, Rite Aid announced that it would again be entering the Chapter 11 process, having done so in October 2023, and that it would be selling off and closing its roughly 1,200 locations as a result. Prior to the most recent filing, Rite Aid had already announced more than 1,000 store closures as of late June.

What Happens Next

It is unclear when the stores will shutter for good, though employees at certain locations in Pennsylvania and Connecticut have told local media that they expect to close in August.

Many of Rite Aid's locations and pharmacy assets, including prescription files, have already secured buyers. Late last month, the company received court approval to sell its Thrifty Ice Cream brand for $19 million.
